POLICE AND LOTTERIES.

REDOUBLED EFFORTS TO STOP THE WORK OF THE GAMBLERS.

How Law Violators Escaped _Thwarting the Subsidized Counsel of the Louisiana Company... Test Case to He Made Under Section 763.

The police authorities of The police authorities of the city, encouraged by the stand taken by This Chittle against the Louisiana State Lottery, have redoubled their efforts to find some way of escape through the meshes of the net which the acts of Congress have formed around them. They have again and again tried to discover a law under which the agents of the great gambling institution might be prosecuted and a institution might be prosecuted and a case made. Each time they have been thwarted by the shrewd and high priced counsel employed by the company, who has studied with just as eager an eye and as active a sense as they have.

The police think that they have at last found a way out of the difficulty however, and in looking over the statutes they have come upon section 763, which reads:

Any one of the justices may hold a special term with the same powers and jurisdiction possessed and exercised by the District Courts of the United States. This statute held out some hope and it was pursued further. The discovery was made that seventeen years later it was revised so as to read: Section 763 is amended by striking out said section and inserting in lieu thereof the following as section 763: Said courts shall have cognizance of all crimes and of-fenses committed within said District, and of all cases in law and equity between par-ties, both or either of which shall be resident or found within said District, and also of all actions or suits of a civil nature at common law or in equity, in which the United States shall be plaintiffs or complainants; and of all seizures land or water, and all penalties and feitures made, arising or accruing under the laws of the United States; and any one of the Instices may hold a Criminal Court for the trial of all crimes and offences arising within the District.

This law, the police think, covers the agents of the lottery company. In selling tickets of the New Orleans firm they are guilty of a misdemeanor in the sight of the law. Now the question is thether or not an "offense" and a "mis demeanor" are not synonymous. This question the courts will have to decide. But just here another obstacle was thrown in the way of the law being carried out. In 1871 the Police Court was organized and given exclusive jurisdiction over all crimes and offenses committed within the District within a certain limit. This limit is supposed to have included the offenses committed by the agents of the lottery in this city, and when brought before that court they simply demanded a jury trial. This the Police Court, of course, can not give them, and the cases are sent on to the grand jury, who never prefer an indictment. As has been before stated in THE CRITIC, they are awaiting the decision of the case of Edward Green, which has now been before the Court in General Term for several years, and, perhaps, will always remain pigeon-holed, for it has been clearly demonstrated that were a decision made it would prove conclusively the unconstitution ality of the Police Court. This the higher courts do not want, for it would stop short the administration of justice in the District and deluge the higher courts with a flood of perty trials. The acts organizing the Police Court came in direct conflict with other and earlier acts, and the statute quoted is one of them. Every American has the right of trial by jury, and no judge has the right or power to deny this demand. It is just here that the ad-pression attentively, and he has them all at his fingers' ends. What he doesn't know about it isn't worth knowing, and what he says about it may be taken as true without a grain of allowance.

There are just two ways out of the trouble," he said to THE CRITIC representative. "Either Congress must give to the Police Court a jury, or section 763 must be brought into requisition. We have tried the former method, and, in the closing days of President Cleve-land's Administration, a bill was passed by Congress, giving the Police Court a jury of six men for the trial of any cases where a jury trial might be demanded. This bill was sent to the President for his signature, but he never gave it. On the other hand, it was vetoed, and two or three days afterward Congress adjourned and President Harrison took his seat. I haven't heard of the bill since that me.

"I think there is no reason why a "I think there is no reason why a case should not be made in section 763. In very plain words it gives the justices a right to sit in criminal trials. Why haven't they a right to sit in the lottery haven't they a right to sit in the lottery and policy trials as well as any other The Supreme Court of the United States has decided a case which I think puts the matter in rather a clear light, though it also decides that the Police Court is unconstitutional. This was in the case of the striking theatre or chestras of the city who were charged with conspiracy, and the case being carried to the Supreme Court it was decided in favor of the defendants on thos:

This decision was made just as I had been directed by A. A. Birney, who was at that time the Prosecuting Attorney of the District, to act. He directed me to arrest every lottery agent in the city, and after some difficulty I succeeded in getting warrants against over thirty of them. It was four days before got the warrants, however, and by that time they had wind of it, and when we went to make the arrests we found every place closed, and had to serve them whenever we were able to find the

'At last we got them all to the Police Court, but before we could do anything the decision was made by the Supreme Court, and for some reason the cases were abandoned. I think there is no reason why the cases should not be made on section 763."

The police propose to make an arrest under this section of the law and make n test case. If they succeed in making the case, the lucrative business of sell ing lottery tickets in the District will soon be a thing of the past.

ONE OF NATURE'S FREAKS.

One Part of a Man's Body Out of Proportion to the Other.

BALTIMORE, Mo., Feb. 24.—Drs. Smith and Branham of the City Hospital report the death of an iron moulder named Joseph Steele under rather peculiar circumstances. The man, who was about 35 years of age, when brought to the institution was, when brought to the institution was, from the chest up, including arms, the size of a man who would weigh about 200 pounds. His lower extremities were those of a man who weighed about 100 pounds. The man stated that he had been treated at the Johns Hopkins Hospital for quite awhile, but found no relief. He then came to the City Hospital about one week ago. He City Hospital about one week ago. He was not communicative. The faculty, as well as the resident physicians, Il examined the patient, and came to the conclusion that Steele died from an obstruction of the vena cava vein, which feeds the upper extremities from the heart. The man's neck, face and arms were terribly swollen, and at times his eyes seemed ready to pop from his head. His arms were twice their natural size, and he seemed to suffer much pain. Frequently he would fall asleep while standing up, and then drop to the floor. He seldom lay down. After death several friends called, and requested that the remains be placed in charge of undertaker M. A. Dalger. They would not permit a post-mortem examination.

CLEVELAND WILL NOT BUY IT.

How the Report His Friends Would Buy the St. Paul "Globe" Started. A dispatch was sent out from this city the other day to the effect that friends of ex-President Cleveland were going to buy the St. Paul Globe, the leading Demecratic paper of the Northwest order to be a like the content of the con west, in order to boom his candidacy for 1892. Mr. Lewis Baker denies the report, saying that he had refused to sell last summer at a better than good price. He then tells how the report might have originated.

"About a year ago I was in Washing-ton and met Dan Lamont. We were discussing Western newspaper property At that time there was a minority in terest in the Globe held by outside parties, though in such shape that I could sell it to any person. I mentioned this to Mr. Lamont and said: 'If you know any bright editorial writer who desires to come West and take an interest in the Globe I can arrange it so that you can purchase this minority stock. Some time later Mr. Lamont sent to me Mr. Lyman, who subse quently got control of the Helena Inde pendent, and who was then Washington correspondent of the New York Sun. We discussed the matter several times, and finally I told him that perhaps a small newspaper, in which he could get a controlling interest, would suit him better.

"He assented, and I referred him to the Helena Independent, saying I thought he could arrange a deal with Governor Hauser to secure that paper. It is possible that when some one was talking of Western newspapers, La-mont, who was in Washington a few days ago, mentioned that an interest in the Globe could be purchased, and this started the rumor. That interest, how-ever, is not now for sale, all the stock being under my control. I notice also in this dispatch it is said that the pur chase of certain newspaper plants to boom Mr. Cleveland's candidacy early in the game is a part of the battle his friends have mapped out. Now, if his friends are as shrewd as I believe they are they will not do anything of that sort. His candidacy will not be aided by any programme of that character. It is too early to boom any candidate. Booms started so long in advance of the Presidential year are liable to die a natural death. If Mr. Cleveland is to secure the nomination it must come by reason of a widespread feeling that he s the proper man to be put at the head of the Democratic ticket, and it will not be gained by the purchase of newspapers to boom his candidacy."

It will be observed that there was a pretty good foundation for the report,

In conclusion, the witness said that he was not invited to Lane's wedding to the Widow Graham. She did go to Lane's funeral, but was ordered out of

William B. Reed said that for twenty years he was in the same real estate dlice with Lane, at 100 Fourth avenue. Lane, he said, was sour and penurious in disposition. William P. Maynard, a photographer, said he called on old Lane just after his son died, and wishing to show sympathy, said:

GEN. WILLIAM HENRY BROWNE-"I think if THE CRITIC is exposing frauds it is deserving of much praise for so doing. I know myself that property west of Sixteenth street was assessed at a much higher rate than property east of Sixteenth street, because differ nt assessors happened to make the assessments. Even on this block unjust ssessments have been made and it looks to me as if assessments are made in the nterest of the rich and against the poor. On at least two occasions I tried to have unjust assessments which were made on property I own, corrected, but met with such treatment from the Board of Assessors that I thought it best to let things stand as they were; in fact, the game was not worth the candle, for I lost more time and had more trouble on these occasions than the saving on money on the corrected assessments would have been worth.

"Again I called on the Board of As-sessors and said: 'You have assessed my house, 1645 K street northwest, at a higher rate than you have the property which is separated from me by the en-gine house east of my home. To this I received the reply: 'We will hold you to that assessment because it came to our ears that you had made the remark that the engine company next door

"Now," continued General Browne, 'everybody knows as well as I do the fact that an engine company located next door to one's house will decrease the value of that property rather than increase it, but I like the engine company. Its members are a lot of fine fellows, but my assessment should not be made higher for that reason. I remember, in a conversation some time before that assessment was made friend asked me if the proximity of the engine house to my house did not decrease the value of the latter piece of property. I didn't wish to say any-thing against the fire company and I said no; in fact, I rather liked it. This remark, however, made my assessment much higher than it should be. There is a piece of property next door to the west which has been on the market for several years, but its owner cannot sell it because it is assessed too high. You an see that it is an old wooden struct ure, but it remains on its owner's hands on this account.

"The right of things is not considered at all. It is unjust. It is the system of appointing temporary assessors, liable to be influenced by speculators and other interested parties, who can manip-ulate them as they choose, that causes the making of these unjust assessments. By the present system your appeal for readjustment of an unjust assessment must be heard by a certain time or be-fore the Board of Assessors which made the assessment goes out of office. In many cases you are told your appeal could not be considered in time, and when you try to learn the reason why you find that a new board is in office, which can do nothing with your appeal This is a denial of justice to property-owners. Congress should pass some measure to enable our appeals on this question to be heard. Taxpayers have more reason to complain under the present system of assessing property than any system I know of. The American people detest a system which denies the right of appeal, and I think our own method of doing this work is the most detested on record. I know, myself, that thousands of appeals for a correction of unjust assessments have been filed, but were never heard, bebeen filed, but were never heard, be-cause the board to which they were made went out of office before they were reached."

MAHLON ASHFORD - "The stand taken by THE CRITIC meets my unqualified approval. For years I have given this subject much thought, and the result of my experience and observation is in entire accord with the case so forcibly presented by THE CRITIC. Why, at the last assessment a dwelling on the square where I live, built over twenty years ago at a cost of less than $5,000, was returned at $8,000, while other dwellings in the immediate vicinity, built not over five years ago at a cost of $20,000, were returned at half their

The trouble is with the system. I regard it as impossible to effect a just and equitable assessment under the present system, and whenever occasion offered I have advocated a retorm in

We should have a permanent Board of Assessors composed, say, of six citizens, with such fixed salaries as would secure their undivided attention and service. The increase in revenue that would result from the adoption of such a plan would fully justify it, and we would get an assessment just alike to rich and poor. Each member of the board would have ample time and opportunity to exhaust many avenues of inquiry as to real estate values in his district and all errors in his find ings could be corrected by the full board sitting as a court of appeal."
"What do you think of the views of

Mr. Warner on this subject?" inquired the reporter. "In my judgment," continued Mr. Ashford, "he is mistaken. In the light of experience and observation in other cities his position is wholly untenable. Take for instance the city of Baltimore Its assessment system is an admirable one. Its press has never hesitated to expose the short-comings of any of its officials, and yet its advancement in wealth and prosperity in the last twenty years has not been surpassed by any other city in the country.

"The truth never yet injured any community. It is the duty of the press to lay bare the truth and to zealously expose any unjust or unequal adminis tration of the laws, whether resulting from incapacity, lack of system or corruption. Especially should that duty be performed here, where we have no voice in legislation and no exponent of our views and needs except the public press.

"I would add, while on this subject, that our whole system of land laws sadly needs reforming. While nearly, if not all, of the State have established land laws der ...y the spirit of the age, we are still groping amid the mists of past centuries. The result is that there are acres of land in this city, abandoned by the abandoned by the owners over sixty years ago, which would long since have been improved, but which still remain vacant, yielding little or no revenue to SAMUEL YOUR ATLEE - The press should report whitever frauds or will it hears of. In regard to the stories of unjust assessment in the District, which were published in THE Curric, I would say that I think that every man's property should be assessed upon the same basis. The rich and in-fluential men should not have the power to influence the assessors to the disalto influence the assessors to the disal-vantage of poor men. I think the present system is very unjust, and that something should be done to remedy it. I have been a citizen here for more than forty-five years, and have been president of the old Common Council, but in those days the people had a voice in its doings; but while I am not anxious for the return of the ballot here on account of the citize all that all here, on account of the cvils that al-ways attach to it, I think something should be done. The press should come out decidedly against this abuse in the manner followed by THE CRITIC, and assessors who are honest and intel-ligent should be appointed."

For this reason I think that the DIstrict ought to have a permanent board, so that complaints of this nature could be adjusted. It would certainly give opportunity for a more thorough and satisfactory valuation. That the people of limited means frequently taxes on too high a valuation, and the who are larger property owners and capitalists on too low a valuation, there s no question, and the sooner the difficulty is remedied by legislation the better it will be for all concerned. I can readily see what an injustice the present system works to the poorer classes. Now is a good time to get at the ques

The truth of the whole matter is that the ewe lamb has to carry the most of the burden, and it is not fair. I don't know how it would act to have a per-manent board; have not looked into it, and am not qualified to talk on that score.

J. J. Darlington—'Yes, I know that there is considerable inequality in relation to our taxes, and there is but little doubt that we ought to have change. I can point you out one building, the United States Trust building corner of New York avenue and Fifteenth street, which I am creditably informed cost $200,000, and it is equal ized at $60,000. This is a brand new bulding, and is only a fair illustration of how many properties are equalized in the northwest. Whether a permanent Board of Equalization would remedy the existing difficulty I am unable to say. It would depend somewhat on the men who were selected to do the work and the manner in which they were compensated for it."
FRANK T. BROWNING—"I am very positive that the manner in which the assessment business has been carried on in the District for years has worked a entirely too low as compared with the improvements and progress that is be ing made there. I know that in the old part of town there are properties assessed at a valuation that it would be impossible to sell at. Take for instance the old May property, on C street, between Third and Fourand a half streets; it cannot be sold to-day for $13,000, whereas before the war this same place was worth $25,000. I don't believe in this idea of assessing property up to a full valuation, particularly in sections where there is no advancement. Property, in my opinion. ought to be assessed at exactly what it would bring at a forced sale under the most unfavorable circumstances.

BUFFALO SENSATION.

Remarkable Case of Two Radfords Which is Puzzling the Lakeites,

Buffalo has a mystery. A man calling himself Isaac H. Radford of To ronto is in Buffalo, and is plunging in real estate like a veritable Count of Monte Cristo. A real estate man said to a local reporter:

"Radford is not planking down a great deal of hard cash. Most of his deals are trades. He seems to have any quantity of property in Georgia, Da-kota, North Carolina and even in New York, or near it. He says it is family property. He is trading this property off for Buffalo real estate, and about the only money that has changed hands so far has been in taking up mortgages. He has probably paid on $70,000 or $75,000 in Buffalo. He be trays an extraordinary knowledge of values in different parts of the country, scems to have the law of transfers in different States at his tongue's end, and is, in fact, as sharp as a whip. He is a veritable plunger Mr. Radford and his wife live quietly in rooms in a private house and appear to be thoroughly respectable people. Nevertheless, his appearance in the City by the Lake has aroused the Buffalonian mind, and it is recalled that a man of the same name—Isaac H. Radford and hailing from the same city-To ronto—made a great sensation in Buf falo about five years ago. He registered at the Tucker House and said he was just up from New York City. The recrept about that he had $40,000 bout him.

His movements under the circum stances attracted much attention and when it was reported that he was drowned there was much excitement. He had left the hotel, saying he was going across the river to Victoria. It was known that he hired a boat, and he was noticed by several persons, who observed the color of his overcoat. Next day the boat was found in the river containing the overcoat, but no Radford. Many thought he had been killed, a few that he had committed suicide. Finally his hiding place was discovered, and he was arrested and aken to Toronto on a charge of attemptng to swindle a life insurance com-

SKETCH OF AN INTERVIEW HE IS EXPECTED TO GIVE.

Two Active Brigadiers at Bay - trga-ments of the Pursuers of the Slip-pery Geronimo - General Crook's 'eller and That of His Successor,

While two eminent brigadlers of the Regular Army are conducting the Apache campaign in the District of Columbia, the unfortunate settlers in Arizona are pouring in protests against their own possible slaughter, should the Crook bill pass and Geronimo and his murderous band be sent to Fort Sill in the Indian Territory. While the War Department and In dian Office in particular are trying t find out whether or not Brigadie Crook, who did not capture them, o Brigadier Miles, who did, is the hero o this occasion, the distressed citizens of Arizona, who will be directly affected by the order, are completely lost sight of But so long as Brigadier Crook sees the eagle on Brigadier Miles' shoulder. and goes him one better, there is apt to be more or less delay in the solution of the Indian problems.

Within the past three or four days the Mexican Minister has supplemented the Arizonians by filing a letter of protest against the passing of the bill. He claims that the Mexican Government, after years of experience with these raiding bands of Comanches from across the border, does not want a repetition of such outrages. He says, further, that since the settlement of the Northern provinces, over 20,000 people have been butchered and their lands again and again laid waste by these savages. To the mind of the plain civilian, it begins to look as if this entire Apache removal, so deeply concerning the Eastern philanthropist and Southwest settler, were based on the official difference of two blue and gold brigadiers rather than the interests of the white settler or the improvement of the Indian.

The removal bill, having passed the Senate, is now being warmly discussed in the House, and it is claimed by the friends of Brigadier Miles that the emissaries of Brigadier Crook, several beardless cadets just assigned to duty from the Point, are here in Washing ton testifying before the House com-mittee and otherwise managing the campaign of the ranking brigadier gainst his insubordinate subordinate. However much Brigadier Miles may have blundered in his Apache campaign, it certainly appears that he cap-tured and corralled the hostile band, which had already massacred over 600 of our soldiers and settlers in the South. west. It likewise appears that Brigadier Crook, who had previously-wrestled with this same Geronimo, did not cap ture him, and the natural sentiment among the people still desirous of preserving their fives and property is a very decided objection to a renewal of rook pelicy.

Within a day or two Brigadier Miles will probably be interviewed by an es teemed contemporary and will, in all probability say:

"Years ago it was proposed to gather all the Apaches and place them on a reservation in the Indian Territory, but it was never intended that a part of them should remain in Arizona, a part in Mexico, and the hostile bands in the Indian Territory, from which ground of vantage they may and would so easily escape to renew their depre-

When Brigadier Miles is questioned in reference to his discharge of Briga-dier Crooks' scouts he will probably say:

"It was unnatural and unreasonable to suppose that Indians of not only the same tribe but having brothers, sisters and mothers with the hostiles, would great injustice to the poor. Everybody that has given our present mode of equalization any study can very readily scarcely be depended upon to commit so unnatural a crime, especially since the clannish spirit of the Indian is so well known."

When questioned concerning the capture of Chato, the scout, and his im prisonment, General Miles will admit that he was with Geronimo's band in the last raid, but that "he was one of the most brutal of them all, and stands before the Territory indicted for the most atrocious murders ever committed

To the question as to whether or not these Apaches can escape from the reservation in the Indian Territory and find their way back through a familiar country to their instinctive occupations, the General will probably answer by

Should be be pressed for a solution of the question and asked to name a region where these savages can be properly cared for and gradually educated and civilized, the Brigadier-General will undoubtedly say: "Keep them east of the Mississippi. Remove them entirely from their native surroundings, prevent them from sowing discord in the peace ful tribes of the Comanches and Kio was; keep them within the refining in fluences of an impregnable and estab-lished Christian civilization,"

Moral sussion and boiled shirts for the savage, and not the temptation of native beath, are what Brigadier Miles will demand.

A prominent Army officer, comment ing yesterday on the Indian situation. remarked:

Between the extreme brutality of west, the unguided philanthropy of the East, the Indian agent, the Indian Office, the Army and Christian whisky, poor devil of a savage has a hard row to hoe." This same officer, well grounded in the petty lealousies and heart burning of regular army life, says: "Because of a mere personal feeling of pique on the part of a ranking officer, the people of both Arizona and Mexico will be forced to again suffer the same uneasiness, terror and loss of life and property," more than that he insists that "Brigadier Crook is inconsistent when says in his late report that it would be unsufe to return them to their old reservations, and yet urges that they be sent to another, from which escape is asy and almost certain."

The war of the Brigadier is not yet one, and Arizona must wait the call
